

Wedding Band Packages Offer Flexible Live Entertainment Formats

September 17, 2026

KANSAS CITY, KS - September 17, 2026 -

Planning live entertainment for a wedding often involves more than selecting a band. Couples and event planners must consider the size of the room, musical coverage, stage requirements, and how the entertainment should carry guests from dinner into the reception. Lost Wax Band addresses those considerations through several live entertainment configurations, giving wedding clients a way to match the band setup with the scale and style of an event.

The band's wedding band packages range from a five-piece lineup to a 10-piece ensemble and a live band and DJ combination. Each configuration is built around a different approach to live performance, while keeping the focus on familiar songs, energetic transitions, and an engaging reception experience. The range allows entertainment planning to begin with the event itself rather than with a single fixed band format.

The Signature five-piece band centers on drums, guitar, bass, and two lead vocalists. The arrangement is designed for high-energy mashups and a continuous mix of recognizable hits, making it a practical format for weddings where the entertainment needs to fit within a more compact stage footprint. With multiple lead vocalists, the lineup can also support variety across the musical set.

The eight-piece band adds keyboard and saxophone to the core rhythm section and expands the vocal lineup to three lead vocalists. As the most popular of the available wedding band packages, the configuration provides additional instrumentation while retaining the live, dance-oriented character of the smaller ensemble. The expanded lineup can be considered for receptions with more room for a larger stage presence.

For events calling for a larger ensemble, the Ultimate 10-piece band adds a full three-piece horn section to the eight-piece foundation. Drums, guitar, bass, keyboard, and three lead vocalists round out the group. The result is a full-band format intended for weddings where the entertainment setup is an important part of the production.

The Collective combines a live band with a DJ, creating a hybrid entertainment format. The lineup includes a DJ, drums, guitar, violin, a three-piece horn section, and a lead vocalist. This arrangement is designed to keep music moving between live performances and DJ sets, while giving planners a single entertainment format that can accommodate both elements of a reception.

Selecting among wedding band packages can also depend on the event schedule and desired transitions. A wedding with a smaller reception space may call for a more compact ensemble, while a larger celebration may have the stage area and production needs to support additional musicians. Events that require both live performance and DJ programming can instead consider a hybrid approach. These options give planners room to shape entertainment around the reception's setting, schedule, atmosphere, and production requirements. The choice ultimately depends on the venue, timeline, guest experience, and role live music is expected to play during the celebration.

Lost Wax Band provides live wedding entertainment with configurable lineups built for different event formats. Its offerings include five-piece, eight-piece, and 10-piece bands, along with The Collective live band and DJ option. The group works with wedding clients and event planners to identify an entertainment setup suited to the celebration and venue.
